Between 11pm and 5am
the world is calm, nobody
expects anything from you.
So you can just stay up and read some crappy book
without feeling guilty.

School stressed me out.
Homework and learning were too much. I had no freetime nor hobbies.

Since my real life seemed so boring I started to get really invested in fictional worlds and hoped for someone to come and make my life as interesting as those worlds always seemed to me.

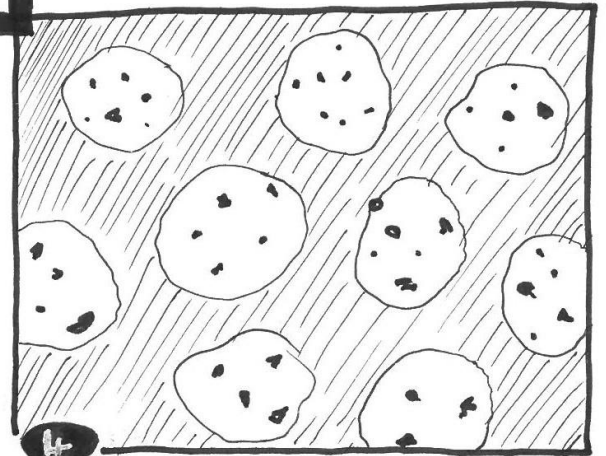

I realized that obviously nobody would come and just make my life interesting because life doesn't work like some cheesy film or book.

So gradually I started appreciating the smallest things because they were always there and with time bigger things started to happen too.

There is happiness in every single cookie, strawberry, song that you sing along to and every animal that you see.

There are still nights where everything is just too much and sleep won't come but life is like that and also this isn't

THE END.
